I. General information

Question 1

1. Article 10 of the Constitution of Mongolia declared that “International Conventions and treaties, ratified by Mongolia will be applicable in national laws as soon as it is entered into force” and further it stipulates that in case of any inconsistency between international treaty and national law, international treaty shall be subject to be higher legal order.

2. The rule on the application of international treaty in domestic judicial practice is determined in accordance with Mongolian Supreme Court’s Decree No. 09 on “Application of international treaty ratified by Mongolia and generally accepted norms”. Under its mandate, the National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia has issued 25 claims regarding 33 cases of violation of human rights and freedom since its establishment. Although the Committee indicated principles and standards for all the claims, the court used these standards as the basis for 2 cases only. Economic, social and cultural rights are asserted in litigation in the Courts. This is done with reference to the Constitution rather than to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. It is difficult to say with absolute certainty that the Covenant has not been cited in domestic litigation but it has not formed the basis for any judgement. A search of the databases for litigation involving Government Departments in the past ten years shows no examples. The Superior Courts consistently identify the separation of powers as the limit on adjudication of such rights by courts: the courts cannot allocate finite public funds. The courts do adjudicate rights of procedural fairness in respect of economic, social and cultural rights/claims.

Regarding the finance

3. Under the Paris Principles, the Government must allocate sufficient budget to the National Human Rights Commission in order to ensure its autonomy and independency. Accordingly, Article 22 of the Law on National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia provides that the Parliament of Mongolia has to allocate sufficient budget for National Human Rights Commission in the State revenue based on the Commission's request that avails autonomous and independent activities. However, the Parliament takes consideration of and approves the amount of the budget based on Government's request only.

4. Also, under the Paris Principles, if any new mandate is charged to the Commission, the budget must be increased accordingly. In accordance with the Law on Gender Equality of Mongolia approved by Parliament on 2 February 2011, the Committee is charged with responsibilities to report to Parliament on the implementation of gender equality legislation in the country and addressing and monitoring of claims and complaints relating to gender discrimination (15.1.4.b of Article 15), as well as receive and deal with complaints on violence of gender equality. As seen from the increase of responsibilities, the budget to be allocated for the Committee should be increased accordingly.
